

Murder Justified.

Some of the most malignant of the opprobrious journals of the country, who characterized the Fort Pillow massacre as an Abolition invention, have now the satisfaction of knowing that the evidence of the atrocity is not only supported on our side by the most indubitable proof, but the rebel journals confess the deed and justify it. And nobody need be astonished that they should, for when such papers in the north as the La Crosse Democrat, which, two years ago, was too loyal to even publish the Ryan Address on account of its disloyalty and sympathy with the South, has the fiendish audacity now to offer excuses for the murder on the ground that those massacred were of another color, it is not surprising that those engaged in this more than wicked rebellion, should look upon it with approving eyes. It is, but an outgrowth of that inherent devilishness which has ever characterized the actions of those brought up under the influence of the barbarous and brutalizing curse. A recent number of the Richmond Examiner, speaking of the affair at Plymouth, says: "The details of the affair at Plymouth are not yet fully ascertained. It is, however, safe to pronounce it one of the most brilliant affairs of the war. Its immediate fruits are important. Those which may ultimately flow from it, the possession of an abundant country, and the possible command of the inland waters of North Carolina, (though as yet the subject of uncertain speculation,) and may well excite new hopes for the future."

Gen. Hoke, judging from the large number of prisoners, does not seem to have made such thorough work as that by which Forrest has so shocked the tender souls and frozen the cold blood of the Yankees. The resistance he encountered was, probably not so desperate, and the blood of the victors was not so heated; though in a fortification carried by storm, the loss of the garrison must inevitably be large.

The strict laws of civilized warfare acknowledge the power of the victor to put all to the sword in such cases. However severe such an example might seem, it would strike a salutary terror in the Yankees which will be useful to them in the end, and their melancholy victim at meeting a part of the punishment their barbarities merit is absurd."

This "thorough work" of Forrest at Fort Pillow, which finds its justification in the rebel interpretation of the strict rules of civilized warfare, is downright, cold-blooded murder and can not be called any other name.

Mr. Cisco, head of the Treasury in New York, swore upon the trial of J. W. Hunter, for forgery that no man could possibly imitate Mr. Hunter's handwriting so closely as to deceive him: that he could not be mistaken in regard to handwriting with which he was familiar. A slip of paper was then handed to him for inspection, and he was asked if he himself had written it; he answered that he had. When this declaration was made, the opposing counsel asserted that the penmanship was the work of a clerk in the city, done in the presence of several witnesses.

The Archduke Maximilian has at last accepted the title of Emperor of Mexico. He considers himself, he says, the "legitimate elect of the Mexican people." He accepts "the power of organization," he says "at the hands of the nation," and declares that "Mexico has used her right of selecting a government in harmony with her wishes and requirements."

Serpents.

Serpents are found in the greatest numbers, and of the largest size, in the torrid zone, and become rarer and smaller as we approach colder regions. Swamps and jungles seem to be their favorite haunts, and so rapidly do they increase, that were it not for their numerous enemies they would prove a serious annoyance to man.

The badger, hedge-hog, weasel, and ichneumon, among animals; the hawk, kite, falcon and buzzard, among birds, destroy vast numbers of this race; while man, from temptation and fall, has waged against it a perpetual war. Thus, serpents are driven, as it were, into the desert, that they may there breed and increase in security.

Reptiles have been classified by writers on Zoology under four great orders, three of which are furnished with feet, as, for example, lizards, tortoises, and crocodiles. Serpents proper, or ophiidians, as they are scientifically termed, constitute the last of these four orders; and are distinguished from all other living creatures by their inability to move over the ground without feet, by means of successive expansions and contractions of the abdominal muscles, which are connected with the pectorals. A sub-division of the various kinds of serpents, arranges them under two great classes, the venomous and non-venomous. To the former belong fifty species; to the latter, two hundred and seven.

Nowhere, perhaps, in the whole animal creation, is the fine handiwork of nature more remarkable than in the structure of serpents. We cannot here describe all their parts, but would merely say that they are vertebrate animals, the vertebrae being extremely small, and amounting, in some cases, even to five hundred. The action of these vertebrae is perfectly free; and the ribs, being acted on by the muscles, move the abdominal plates, and thus motion is communicated to the whole body.

The serpent moves with ease and swiftness, particularly over dry surfaces, or a sandy soil; but, except in the case of very large ones, they are not quick enough to outstrip a man.

But serpents have not only the power of locomotion, but can throw their bodies into almost every convulsive form. When in repose, they roll themselves into a spiral form, elevating the head slightly above the rest. Dr. Schlegel, who was connected with the Museum of the Netherlands, and issued a very interesting work on the "Physiognomy of Serpents," thus describes some of their movements:—"Very often, in order to observe what passes around them, serpents raise themselves perpendicularly, supporting themselves solely on their tail, or on a part of the abdomen; their trunk is then rigid and perfectly straight; at others bending their bodies as an S, inflating their necks in this position. Suspended perpendicularly from the branch of a tree, the boa resembles a stiff body without life. In descending from a tree, or other tall objects, serpents let themselves simply fall to the ground—their form and the elasticity of their parts preventing any dangerous consequences from the fall." The tail serves a variety of purposes. In the water snake serving as an oar and rudder, in the land species coiling about trunks and branches, and in the burrowing kind being short and conical, to force its way into the earth.

With regard to appendages, snakes differ from other animals in many particulars. Their tail terminates in a rattle, and others there are a couple of hooks at the extremity of the abdomen, but with these exceptions the whole body is bare. There is no external ear, nor does the simple organ which they possess enable them to hear even with ordinary acuteness. Their sense of smell, too, is by no means equal to that of other animals; while in their eye is no peculiarity to warrant a belief in the power of fascination which is so commonly ascribed to them.

Their teeth are of two kinds; solid teeth, with which they grasp and detain their prey, for, always swallowing the animals on which they live entire, they have no further use for them; and fangs, which grow sharp to a point, and have a hollow passage communicating from the point to the poison-glands beneath. It is through these fangs that poison is communicated to the object which they strike. The serpent does not, as we have said, use its teeth to chew its food; it swallows its victims entire, having first covered them with saliva, to render their reception easy. It is generally supposed that the digestion of large bodies thus introduced into the stomach is going on, serpents are torpid and incapable of offense or defense; but extended observation proves that they have the power of disgorging, and can in a moment put themselves in possession of all their activity and powers.

The poison of serpents is slightly glutinous, and of a greenish color. It has no smell, and in feeling resembles the white of an egg. It may be swallowed without injury, being hurtful only when mingled with the blood. Its effects are more fatal in warm than in cold countries. In man, when bitten, acute pain speedily sets in, and inflammation commences. The patient rapidly sinks, experiences a burning thirst, has constant turns of nausea and vomiting, and frequent fainting fits, until which he yields up his senses, and finally his life.

As to antidotes to the poison of snakes, there are numerous remedies, which, if used in time, are efficacious. The power which snake-charmers claim to have, particularly in the East, over all reptiles and their bites, is of course merely pretended, and has no foundation in fact. They carry with them, to be sure, certain snakes which they keep with impunity; but this they are enabled to do by extracting their fangs when they are young, and thus rendering them harmless.

Serpents are oviparous animals, that is, their young are produced from eggs; when hatched they are from four to twelve inches in length.

Their growth is slow, and the size which they attain is different in different species. Travelers in Africa have described some which they have met as being four feet long; and history tells us of one which checked, for a time, the march of a large Roman army. Yet it is probable that the size of these formidable monsters was exaggerated by the fears of those who saw them, as we have no reliable instance on record where they have exceeded twenty-five feet.

Man seems from the earliest ages to have regarded the serpent with peculiar aversion. A prejudice has attached to the whole race, even the harmless varieties, ever since its form was used by the Evil One in the temptation of man. With snakes both Greeks and Romans armed the avenging whip of the Furies; and the serpent has been in many other portions of their mythology. The Egyptians regarded them with religious awe, making them the symbol of fertility; while a snake biting his own tail, and thus forming a circle, was their type of eternity. It is probable that in early times the whole race of reptiles was more numerous and formidable than at the present day, and that the nations of old either connected them with their malignant deities on account of their appearance and habits, or else made them objects of worship, hoping thus to propitiate them, and escape the effects of their hostility.

Cicero, the father of Roman oratory said: "By the grand law of nature, all men are born free, and this law is universally binding upon all men."

What Is Mr. Secretary Chase's Policy?

It is important to know, as far as possible, the future policy of the financial administration of the Government; and especially at this time, when to make gambling speculations profitable, an uncommon flood of false assertions and theories damaging to the public credit, are boldly circulated.

The excitement got up in Wall Street by gamblers in Stocks and gold, are telegraphed everywhere—exaggerated—and the outside public naturally feel that there is some great wrong somewhere, when, in fact, there is nothing wrong. There is only a hullabaloo among the bulls and bears.

Mr. Chase will press right on with the National 10-40 Loan, just as he has begun. There will be no change in the rate of interest. He will make no temporary loans of the Banks, but will take money from the people or the Banks at five per cent. interest, payable on ten days' notice as heretofore; and he will run the usual line of one-year Certificates. He will sell the surplus gold from customs, after setting aside an amount sufficient for six months' interest, and use the proceeds, as the spirit and letter of the law demands, partly in a sinking fund, and partly for the current expenses of the Government.

He appeals to the people in the most trying military and financial period of the rebellion, to come forward with heart and money. He is reducing the volume of currency gradually, and will continue to do so. If the stock and gold gamblers shall again attempt the game they played last week, he will bring the whole power of the Government, and its whole means, both here and abroad to checkmate them.

The Secretary of the Treasury relies upon the People for the ways and means; upon the Army for victories; and upon Congress for adequate taxation.

The people will come to his help with every dollar that can be appropriated. This is their true interest; it is their true safety. If the armies will now do their part there is no alternative but victory. Congress will do its duty—it dare not falter.

To those capitalists who complain that Mr. Chase ought to pay a higher rate of interest, we say pointedly, that a five per cent. obligation against the American people is better than a bond at any higher rate of interest. For why? You anywhere righteously invested, free from extortion, generously invested for your Country's cause, is, and will be through all time, valid. But grind your Country—grind the American people in their time of distress and want—like Shylock's bond—and it will take more than the interest you get over five per cent. to defend your claims against the political tribunals that will adjudge your bonds.

Well-and-wisely would it be for you to come forward with that spirit that inspires the People, and for once, for this emergency, lay aside the spirit that governs the usurer. Your property, your money, your all is at stake. You are in a miserable minority at the ballot boxes. Better either come to the standard of equity and right, or hug what gold you can and leave this hemisphere.—Thompson's Semi-weekly Reporter.

INSURE WITH THE METEAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF WISCONSIN—IT IS THE BEST COMPANY FOR WESTERN MEN!—The reasons why this is the best Company, are: That it is a Western Company, made up of and managed by Western men, doing all or nearly all its business in the Northwest, and concentrating in this one Company a superior class of risks, mostly of young men, or men in the prime of life, and they selected with great care in regard to eligibility to Life Insurance, as are the risks of any other company.

It is true that the Company has neither the age nor the accumulations of some eastern companies, but is gaining the latter very fast; is vigorous for one of its age; is doing a large business, having issued 637 policies in the months of December and January just passed, and is doing its business as economically as the same can be done anywhere. It has for its guide, the experience of all other companies, and among its managers some of the best business men in the Northwest.

This is the first successful effort ever made to build up a similar institution in the West, and it should be the pride, as it certainly is the interest, of every business man in this section of the State, to identify himself with its growth.

The Company issues non-forfeiting policies, upon which premiums are paid in five or ten annual payments. These non-forfeiting policies are very desirable, as they guarantee to the policy holder the benefit of all the money that he pays into the Company, and also enable him to pay his premiums for the whole of life while he is young, or at an early period, thus relieving him from the burden of payment in old age. Insurance upon this plan, (as well as on all other policies that this Company issues) become due and payable at death, should death occur before the ten years expire.

It also issues the endowment policy which becomes due and payable at the age of twenty, or at a stated age specified. These latter policies are becoming quite popular, and are particularly desirable for young men.

LYON'S KATHAIRON.

LYON'S KATHAIRON—Kathairon is from the Greek word "Katharo," or "Kathalo," signifying to cleanse, regenerate, and restore. This article is what its name signifies. For preserving, restoring, and beautifying the human hair, it is the most remarkable preparation in the world. It is again owned and put up by the original proprietor, and is now made with the same care, skill, and attention which gave it a sale of over one million bottles per annum.

It is a most delightful hair dressing. It polishes, softens and beautifies. It keeps the hair cool and clean. It makes the hair rich, soft and glossy. It prevents the hair from falling off and turning grey.

It restores hair upon bald heads.

Any lady or gentleman who values a beautiful head of hair should use Lyon's Kathairon. It is known and used throughout the civilized world. Sold by all respectable dealers. DEMAS & BARNES & CO., Proprietors, New York. Idawdawly.
